Mate Protests Writ by Jury

The husband of Sally J. Hucks, former chief telephone operator at the Woodner who was convicted of plotting to frustrate a grand jury probe of Teamster Union affairs, has been summoned to testify before a similar investigation.

William R. Hucks Sr. objected yesterday, in a motion filed in District Court, to a grand jury subpoena ordering him to appear Thursday. The motion claimed that his testimony would violate a husband's privilege against testifying against his wife.

Mrs. Hucks was convicted and sentenced to 20 months to 5 years in jail for conspiring to tamper with hotel records of telephone calls by Teamster Union officials and falsely denying ownership of a mink stole in testimony before the Senate Rackets Committee.
